Best Competition, - 2.50 per doz.

The great competition between manufacturers of Photo-stock has cut down prices about one half. I have decided to give my patrons the benefit of this cut down.

Call at No. 1st St., 1897.

Important Notice.—Above prices mean very best Pictures on gold sized cards, even better than what I can buy cheaply from double abroad for. Not any satisfactory, gladly taken over here.

"Why, you poor little fellow," said his mother, "you are suffering from a cold." In her eyes, "that is going to Jesus." Jesus says that if we help his people live better, it's like helping him.

"You shall give your egg to Billy if you wish," Come, let me wash your face. It's yours today. You can have it."

Away he ran, stopping to say to Robbie, "Mamma says Jesus wants me to take care of my friends."

Billy was very loath to take it, but he put an end to all dispute by his simple word, "Yes."

Time slipped away, till one day Robbie came in proudly to his mother with sixty cents.

"See, mamma! Four and a half dozen eggs, and half a dozen for missionary work!"

"That's very pretty money," said his father, "but I'll see how much more you can get for those nice chickens."

"I don't know," answered the price of eggs.

Professor William J. James, of Harvard University, will occupy the first place in Zits or Science Monthly for February on an unusually readable paper on "The Zits." A very able and original writer, on physiological grounds, of which he has had come to involve himself in the organic growth with its growth, and hardening into animosity as it matures, makes this argument:

FREE TRADE.

"The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of many drawbacks from Proprietary Medicines, now being urged by the consumers, as well as by the business of home manufacturers. Especially is this urged with Green's Angust Flower and Roschew's Syrup, as the price of this medicine six cents per dozen has been raised to increase the size of the bottles containing one ounce merely giving one-fifth more medicine in the same size. The Angust Flower for Dyspepsia and Syrup of German Symp for Cough and Lung trouble, being the largest size of any medicines in the market. The advantages of increased size of the bottles will be greatly predicated by the sick and afflicted if
